All Thoughts Are Always Overwhelming

Hey look! A forty dollar foil bag with a snap close end containing four paper clips' weight worth of bleached granulated sugar stuck to corn syrup with artificial coloring and flavoring - with no psilocin or psilocybin, which is illegal in all states to possess or sell!

That's one incredibly tiny microdose - so small you can't even measure it!

And for the record, microdosing is bullshit. If you have anxiety or looming overwhelming thoughts that any kind of exterior substance can make go away as long as you keep ingesting this substance, then you have not in any way solved any problem that you originally had. You have only added a new one - the procuring of stated substance continuously for the remainder of your life.

You do not have a chemical imbalance that can be fixed by altering the ingredients ratios. That is not what you are - an amount of ingredients the same as every or anyone else. Brains are proprietary and whether you like it or not you are unique. I know, you spend your entire life trying to be like someone else, but that is actually impossible and you'll never succeed. You were born and grew different and that is your purpose - your only purpose - to continue growing as you will and thus both physically and in a sense of your information collection being transmitted and added to the collective which is accessable to all and is the foundation for those being born at the point of their creation. Every living being is a pattern made from the ingredients present when it begins.

Overwhelming thoughts! All thoughts are overwhelming. They're the only things in your head at any point in time. The only thing that actually exists at any and all points in time to a person, which is their complete reality and entire universe. Nothing ever exists outside of your head to you. This is the only thing that separates humans from other life. The ability to imagine an objective instead of being stuck forever in the subjective.

All thoughts are always overwhelming.